A word from Andy Viner

2024 feels like the year confidence returned to the media M&A market. After a period of subdued growth, we're seeing a real shift in investor sentiment, with private equity leading the charge and early signs of a resurgence in capital market activity.

Data, AI, and social commerce are adding new dimensions to the market, creating fresh opportunities across industries and geographies.

At the heart of this transformation, the US is solidifying its role as both a major acquirer and a sought-after target, connected to 41% of global deals, while Europe – particularly France, the UK, and Spain – remains a key player in the deal landscape.

Beyond the Western World, Africa is emerging as an exciting market to watch, with its vast population and rapidly developing economies signalling a marked rise in interest from investors. While the base remains low today, the region holds immense long-term potential, and we are beginning to see increasing activity in key markets.

Economic and political factors will undoubtedly play a crucial role in shaping dealmaking in 2025. The potential easing of conflicts in the Middle East and Ukraine offer hope for a more stable geopolitical environment and increased investor confidence. Meanwhile, declining interest rates are expected to spur M&A activity, providing private equity firms with more flexibility as they seek exits from pre-pandemic investments. The only barriers I foresee at the time of writing are with regard to trade policies, particularly the prospect of new tariffs under Donald Trump's administration, which may introduce friction in global transactions.

As we look ahead, dealmakers should plan early, maintain realistic valuations and take a strategic approach to exits taking into consideration last year's global trends. Adaptability and foresight will be essential in navigating the dynamic media M&A landscape in 2025.

I hope you enjoy this issue!

Global trends

Things we expect to see in 2025

AI-driven companies will attract investment

Investors are prioritising media companies using AI to enhance content, audience engagement, and efficiency, as automation unlocks new revenue streams.

Market consolidation will accelerate

M&A remains a key strategy as companies scale, streamline operations, and future-proof business models in an evolving digital landscape.

Social commerce will redefine sales

With TikTok, Instagram, and YouTube integrating seamless shopping, brands will continue investing in social commerce to drive direct-to-consumer growth.

Private equity investments and exits will rise

With market confidence improving, private equity firms seek timely exits to maximise returns. Alongside this PE will invest dry powder particularly making platform investments to support buy and build strategies.

Geopolitical shifts will shape M&A

Trade policies, regulations, and economic nationalism will impact cross-border deals, requiring investors to navigate increasing global complexities.

Global trends

Things we expect to see in 2025

US dominance will persist

Strong domestic demand, private equity activity, and AI-driven innovation keep the US at the forefront of global media dealmaking.

Streaming platforms will evolve

With competition rising, services are experimenting with ad-supported tiers, bundling, and exclusives to boost revenue and retain subscribers.

Content licensing will take priority

Streaming platforms are shifting toward licensing proven hits over costly originals, prioritising profitability, subscriber retention, and risk reduction.

Live events will be a key grower

In-person experiences are surging, with brands leveraging AI and social media to amplify reach and create immersive, shareable moments.

Data-driven strategies will shape content

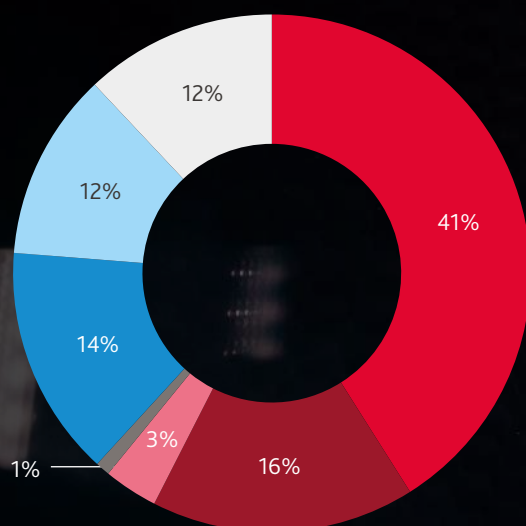

AI-powered analytics are helping companies personalise content, optimise advertising, and predict audience behaviour to stay ahead in a competitive market.

Market analysis

2024

2024 Global Media M&A, top target regions

■ United States ■ Asia Pacific
■ Western Europe ■ United Kingdom
■ Canada ■ Rest of World
■ Africa

Global media M&A remained robust in 2024, with total disclosed deal value surpassing US$130 billion across more than 1,300 transactions. Momentum was particularly driven by large-scale consolidation in the US, which drew 41% of deals.

2024 Global Media M&A, top acquirer regions

■ United States ■ Asia Pacific
■ Western Europe ■ United Kingdom
■ Canada ■ Rest of World

The dominant US market was also a top acquirer, with Western Europe seeing their share plateau at 20%. That said, the UK's MediaTech scene is growing, attracting strong interest particularly from the US, with companies looking to invest in the UK's expertise and cultural influence in the creative sector.

Market analysis

UK Media M&A Transactions by subsector 2024

- Publishing
- Broadcasting and content
- Advertising
- Marketing services
- Digital media
- Public relations
- Event management

Transactions by subsector remained consistent throughout the year, with publishing, broadcasting and marketing services holding strong as the most active markets.

Global market summary and key deals

North America

The US remained dominant in media M&A, driving 44% of global deals, with 41% of transactions targeting US entities. Domestic acquirers led 83% of these deals, focusing on advertising, streaming, and content production.

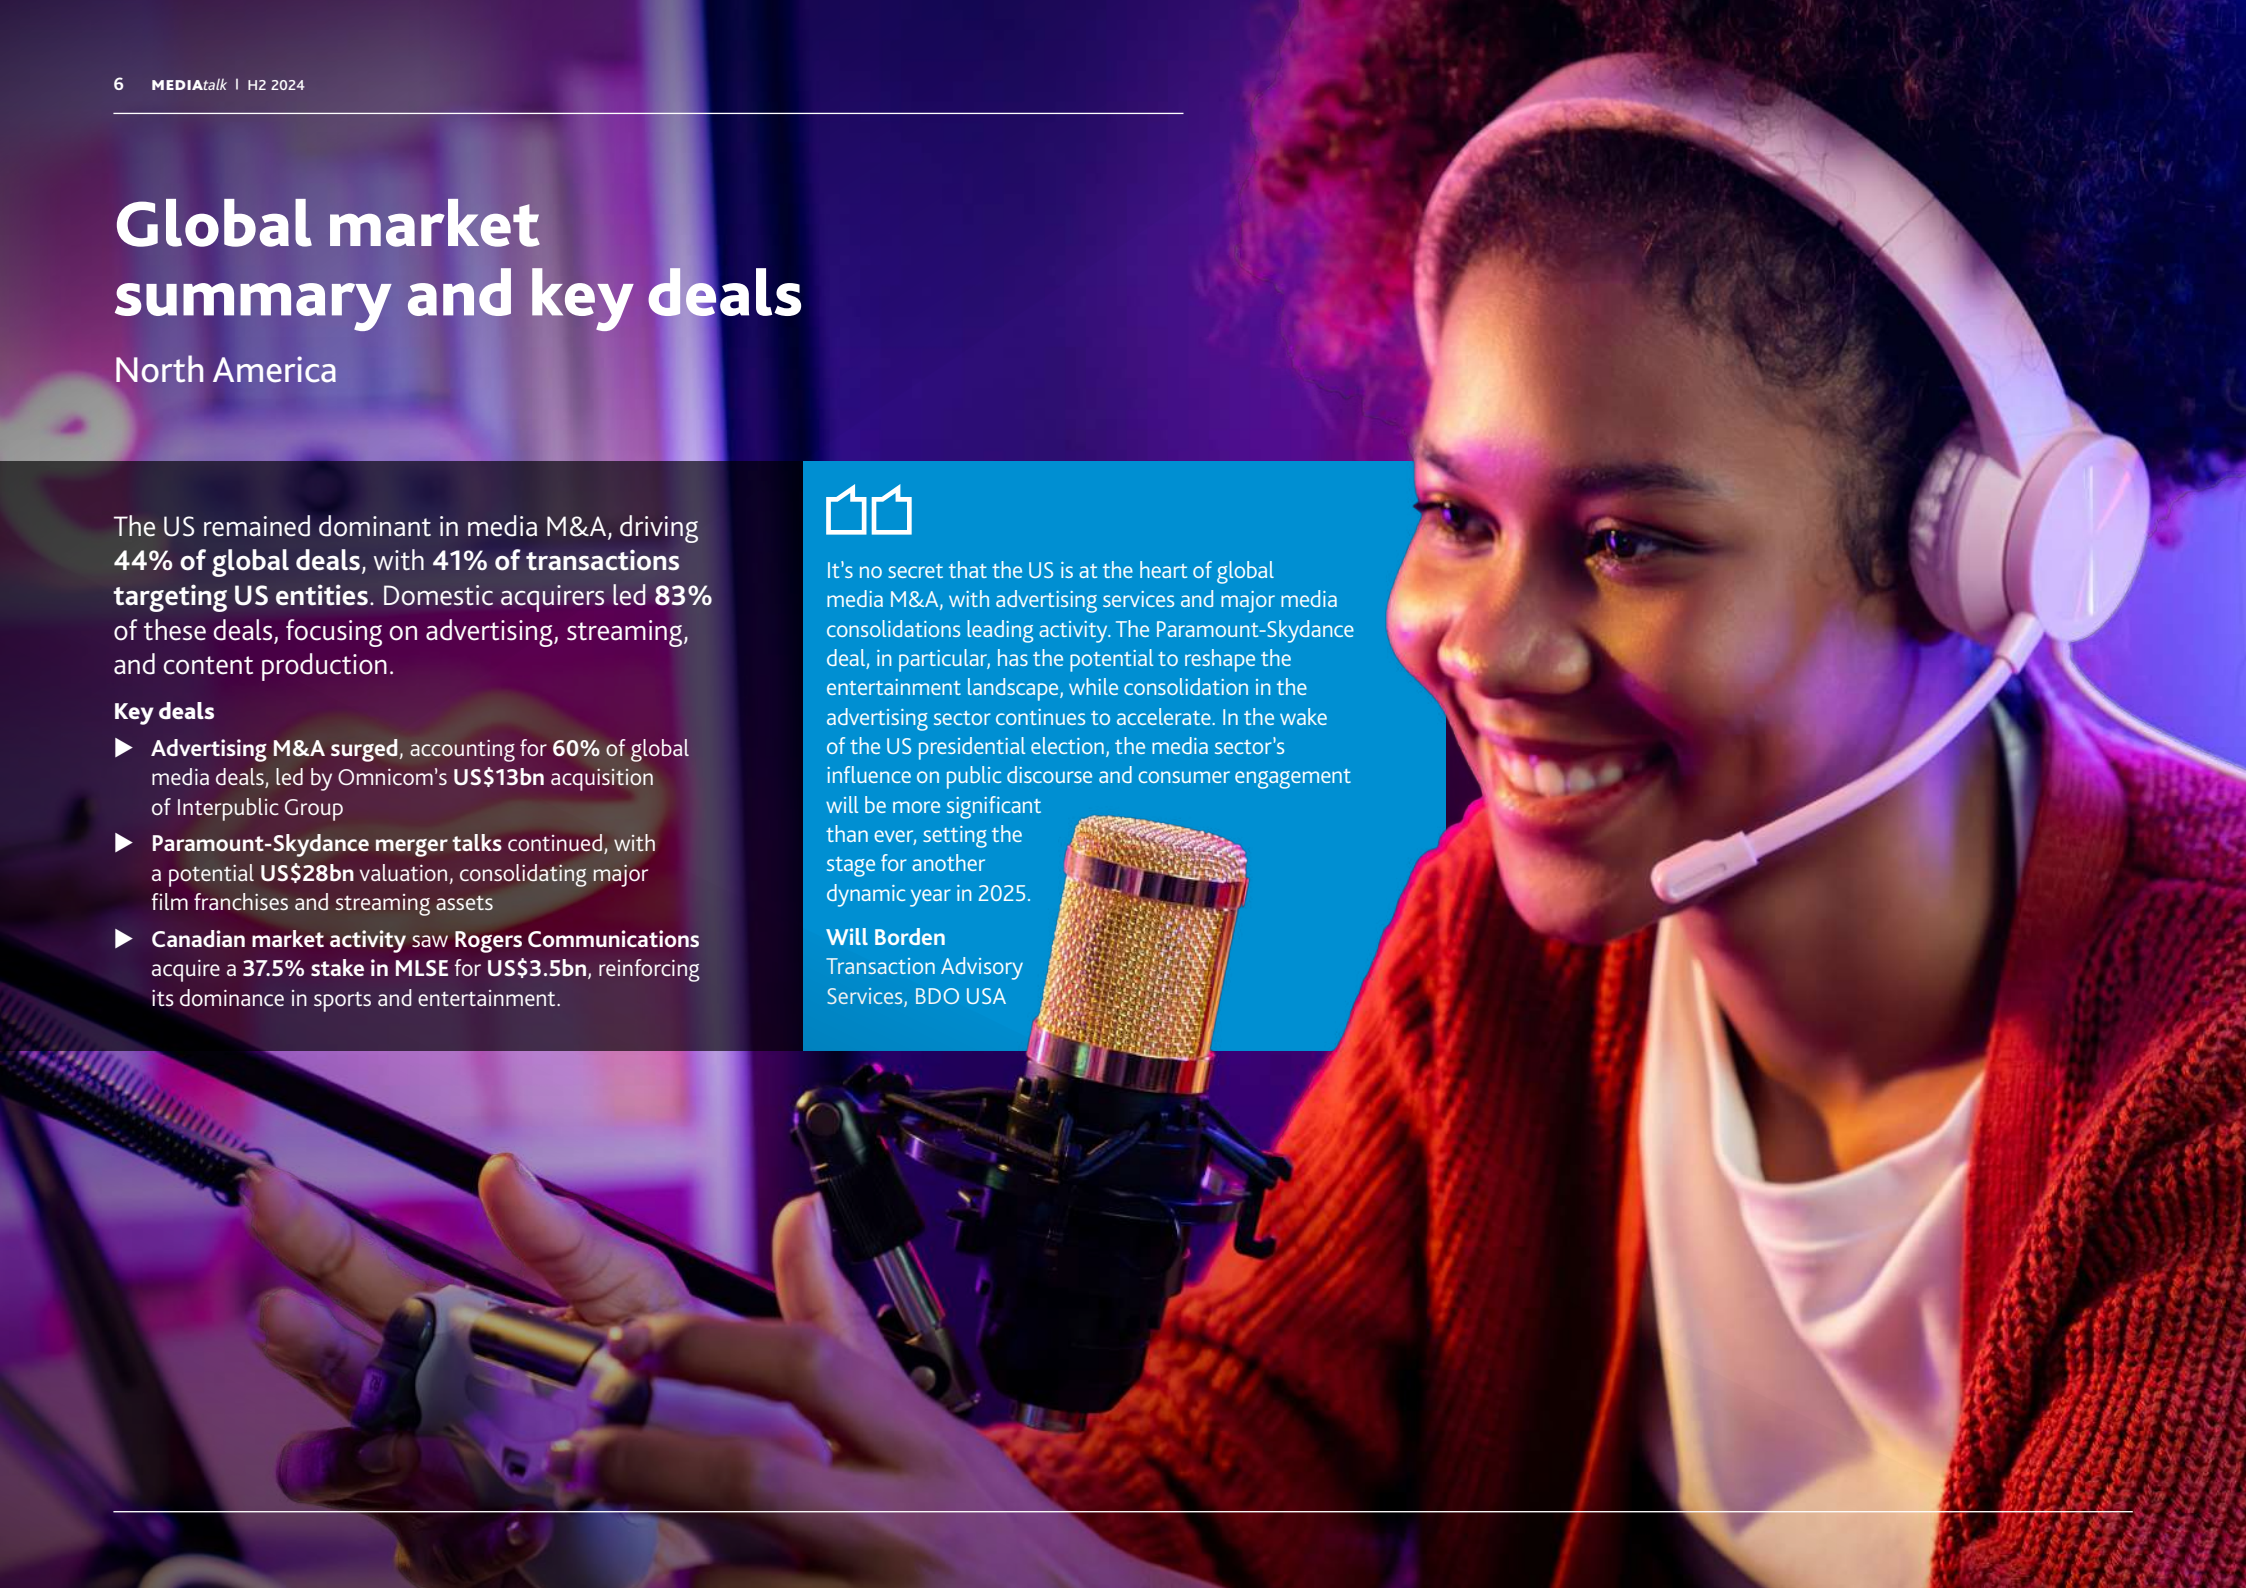

Key deals

- ▶ Advertising M&A surged, accounting for 60% of global media deals, led by Omnicom's US$13bn acquisition of Interpublic Group
- ▶ Paramount-Skydance merger talks continued, with a potential US$28bn valuation, consolidating major film franchises and streaming assets
- ▶ Canadian market activity saw Rogers Communications acquire a 37.5% stake in MLSE for US$3.5bn, reinforcing its dominance in sports and entertainment.

It's no secret that the US is at the heart of global media M&A, with advertising services and major media consolidations leading activity. The Paramount-Skydance deal, in particular, has the potential to reshape the entertainment landscape, while consolidation in the advertising sector continues to accelerate. In the wake of the US presidential election, the media sector's influence on public discourse and consumer engagement will be more significant than ever, setting the stage for another dynamic year in 2025.

Global market summary and key deals

United Kingdom

The UK remained a top target for global buyers, with 12% of global media deals involving UK-based firms. Advertising, broadcasting, and publishing led activity, supported by rising cross-border investment.

Key deals

- ▶ Publishing and broadcasting M&A remained strong, highlighted by Old Queen Street Ventures' US$130m acquisition of The Spectator
- ▶ Major foreign investment, including Bharti Enterprises' US$4bn stake in BT Group, underscored global interest in UK media infrastructure
- ▶ AdTech expansion, with Nazara Technologies' acquisition of Space & Time, strengthening its UK and European presence
- ▶ Film and TV assets attracted buyers, with Curzon World acquired by Fortress Investment Group for US$5m, reflecting ongoing demand for UK content.

It's an exciting time for the UK M&A landscape. Cross-border interest in UK media is still going strong, especially in digital marketing, business intelligence, and publishing, while tech-enabled and/or AI capable outfits are becoming more attractive to potential investors or consolidators looking to future-proof their activities. At the same time, continued investment in tech hubs and tax incentives are promoting innovation, sparking more M&A in digital media and content technology. With a strong foundation in creativity, tech, and cultural influence, the UK's media sector is set to stay ahead of market changes and lead the evolution of global trends into 2025.

Global market summary and key deals

Western Europe

M&A in Western Europe remained steady.

16% of global media deals targeting the region

20% led by Western European acquirers

France and Germany led deal activity, despite potential political uncertainty.

Key deals

- ▶ Advertising and outdoor media remained strong, exemplified by Ströer SE & Co.'s acquisition of RBL Media in OOH advertising
- ▶ Telecom and pay-TV consolidation continued, with Altice Media's US$1.6bn sale to CMA CGM and MERIT France, signalling confidence in content distribution.

Global market summary and key deals

Asia Pacific

M&A activity in APAC remained robust, with 14% of global media deals targeting the region. Japan led deal volume, while China, South Korea, and India saw major transactions in gaming, streaming, and telecommunications. Emerging investment in South-East Asia reflects the region's expanding digital and entertainment sectors.

Key deals

- ▶ Japan dominated regional M&A, accounting for 50% of APAC-targeted deals, led by CVC Advisers' US$482m acquisition of Macromill
- ▶ Gaming and animation M&A surged, with Nintendo acquiring Monolith Soft and CJ ENM taking a stake in Netmarble
- ▶ High-value deals in China, South Korea, and India reinforced their status as key growth markets for digital media and entertainment.

Looking ahead, we expect to see even more movement in APAC's media space, especially in digital content, gaming, and AI-driven entertainment. Southeast Asia is emerging as a key battleground for streaming and mobile-first content, while Japan's advertising and data analytics sectors remain magnets for investment. China, India, and South Korea are also set to play a bigger role in shaping the next wave of innovation, particularly in AI-powered media and interactive entertainment. As global players continue to eye the region, cross-border partnerships and strategic acquisitions will be crucial in navigating this fast-evolving landscape.

Global market summary and key deals

The rest of the world

M&A activity outside major media hubs remained steady, with Africa, Australasia, Central and Eastern Europe, Latin America, and the Middle East contributing to global deal flow.

Key deals

- ▶ Africa's largest-ever media deal, with Canal+ acquiring MultiChoice for US$2.7bn, underscoring pay-TV's growth
- ▶ Australasia saw strong digital and gaming deals, including Shutterstock Australia's US$245m acquisition of Envato
- ▶ Poland led Central & Eastern Europe's gaming M&A, with investments in Demolish Games and Big Cheese Studio
- ▶ Brazil drove Latin American deals, highlighted by Universo Online's acquisition of NeooH in OOH advertising
- ▶ Middle Eastern media investment surged, with Saudi Arabia's Public Investment Fund's US$2.1bn stake in MBC Group.

Media M&A across these regions is entering an exciting phase. Growing digital consumption, expanding gaming markets, and increased investment in content production are set to drive new opportunities. With global players looking beyond traditional markets, we can expect a wave of strategic deals that reshape the media landscape in the year ahead.

Corporate M&A activity

The second half of 2024 saw a surge in corporate M&A, as leading advertising and media firms accelerated acquisitions in digital consultancy, customer experience, and AI-driven marketing. With a focus on high-growth sectors, major players positioned themselves for the evolving media landscape.

Key deals

- ▶ WPP strengthened its creative and customer experience portfolio, acquiring New Commercial Arts (NCA) in September and taking full ownership of The & Partnership (now T&Pm). These moves enhance its integrated marketing capabilities and reinforce its leadership in creative and brand experience services
- ▶ Omnicom reshaped the industry with its US$13bn acquisition of Interpublic Group (IPG) in December, creating the world's largest advertising services company. Earlier in the year, it expanded its digital transformation offering with the acquisition of LeapPoint in September, bolstering its consultancy expertise
- ▶ Publicis led industry M&A activity, completing eight acquisitions, including Mars Advertising (US$600m) in September to expand its commerce-driven marketing capabilities, and Influential Network (US$500m) in July, reinforcing its AI-powered influencer marketing strategy
- ▶ Dentsu continued its digital expansion, acquiring a stake in Japanese DX developer Stu in September, reflecting its commitment to digital transformation in the APAC region.

The pace of M&A in the media and marketing world is showing no signs of slowing. With digital transformation, AI, and integrated marketing solutions at the heart of these deals, 2025 is shaping up to be another big year for strategic acquisitions.

Audit Partner, TMT

Mid-market activity

Mid-market M&A remained a key driver of deal activity in 2024, with advertising and AdTech at the forefront. The UK solidified its position as a hub for AdTech innovation, while cross-border deals highlighted the growing appetite for AI-powered marketing, digital analytics, and emerging technology.

Key deals

- ▶ Advertising and AdTech led mid-market transactions, with AI and automation driving acquisitions. In the UK, LoopMe acquired Chartboost from Zynga, strengthening its programmatic marketing and AI-driven brand advertising capabilities. Similarly, LDC invested US$27.2m in Precise TV, reinforcing the importance of contextual advertising and YouTube-driven marketing
- ▶ International deals surged, reflecting the expansion of advanced advertising services. In Southeast Asia, RB Services Company led a US$189m acquisition of Thailand-based Roctec Global Public, a key player in regional ad solutions. Meanwhile, in the Middle East, MBC Group acquired a 5% stake in Arabian Contracting Services Company, reinforcing the region's growing media and advertising presence
- ▶ AI-powered advertising and analytics gained momentum, with investors targeting firms that leverage AI for ad delivery, research, and automation. UK-based The Hook was acquired by Spain's Squirrel Media, while Germany's Hase & Igel saw a 15% stake acquired by Marcapo, showcasing AI's increasing role in market research and branding
- ▶ Web3 and Metaverse deals remained steady, with selective acquisitions in blockchain-driven businesses. Greenlite Ventures acquired Web3 gaming platform Grin Gaming in August, while The Drop NFT Media was acquired by Blockworks Advisors, highlighting continued niche digital content investments.

Mid-market dealmaking is proving to be a powerful indicator of where the media industry is headed. AI-powered marketing, digital transformation, and regional expansion drove M&A in 2024, and we can expect even greater momentum in these areas in 2025 as companies position themselves for the future.

Deals Director, TMT

Private Equity

Private equity remained a dominant force in media M&A through 2024, with investment value rising despite fewer overall deals. The advertising services sector led the way, generating US$19 billion across 80+ deals, followed by broadcasting and content, which attracted US$10 billion in investment.

Key deals

- ▶ Advertising and marketing services remained the top target, with investors betting on performance-based marketing and corporate communications. GTCR and Recognize Partners acquired TRANZACT for US$632m, while KKR took a 50% stake in FGS Global for US$775m, reflecting the rising demand for M&A communications and reputation management. Additionally, Liftout Capital acquired Pay4Leads, expanding its presence in digital performance marketing
- ▶ Broadcasting and content continued to attract PE investment, with TPG Capital acquiring a 70% stake in DirecTV from AT&T in a US$2bn deal, structured to deliver US$7.6bn by 2029. This move underscores private equity's continued interest in subscription-based and digital TV platforms
- ▶ Sports media and analytics drew investor attention, with Charterhouse acquiring a stake in sports marketing agency Two Circles in January, followed by further investment in September from Otro Capital, Charterhouse, and Bolt Ventures, reflecting the growing appeal of digital sponsorships and fan engagement analytics
- ▶ Trade shows and events saw renewed PE interest, as the industry rebounded. Truelink Capital's US$535m acquisition of Global Experience Specialists in October signals growing confidence in live events and hybrid experiential marketing.

2024 showed that private equity investors are thinking long-term, balancing acquisitions of established businesses with proven revenue models while also seeking growth-stage companies that can be integrated into existing portfolios. Whether in digital content, AI-driven advertising, or live events, investors are looking to back businesses that will define the next decade of media.

Spotlight on the USA

Consolidation is the strategy

The US remains the driving force behind global media M&A. While overall deal volume saw a temporary dip in January 2025 following Donald Trump's election last year (falling nearly 30% year-on-year to 873 transactions), deal activity is starting to rebound as policy clarity and market confidence improve.

US private equity firms, sitting on record levels of dry powder, are actively seeking strategic acquisitions, while corporate buyers continue to invest in high-growth areas such as AI-driven content, social commerce, and data-rich platforms. Expected interest rate cuts should further boost dealmaking in the coming months.

Consolidation in the age of streaming

The ongoing shift from traditional TV to streaming is a key driver of recent M&A activity, as companies consolidate to offset the decline in cable subscriptions and strengthen their market position.

The recent merger of Hulu Live TV with FuboTV exemplifies this strategy, as does Comcast's plan to combine its NBCUniversal cable TV networks into 'SpinCo.' The new entity, reaching 70 million US households, is being positioned as a platform for future mergers.

Spotlight on the USA

Consolidation is the strategy

Why media companies are doubling down on M&A

Several factors are driving M&A activity in 2025:

Cost synergies and ad market influence – by consolidating, companies can reduce operational costs while increasing their bargaining power with advertisers

Strategic content acquisition – buying existing content minimises financial risk compared to investing in new productions.

Consolidation in music

The music industry has also seen a surge in catalogue acquisitions, with major labels and private equity firms competing for rights to legendary artists' work. UK-based Hipgnosis, known for acquiring catalogues from icons like Bruce Springsteen and Bob Dylan, was recently taken over by Blackstone, highlighting the appetite for existing content over new investments.

Spotlight on the USA

Consolidation is the strategy

Did you know?

The world's six largest content companies spent a staggering US$126bn on content in 2024, a 9% increase from the previous year. However, this is expected to halt in 2025 as streaming platforms opt to license popular films and shows rather than gamble on expensive new productions.

Consolidation in advertising

The future of advertising lies in data-driven precision – specifically, using AI to power hyper-targeted marketing campaigns. To stay competitive, holding companies are racing to build or acquire robust data ecosystems, following the lead of companies like Publicis (Epsilon) and Dentsu (Merkle). The appeal is clear: AI-powered programmatic advertising delivers higher returns for clients and greater efficiency for agencies.

It's no secret that the US is at the heart of global media M&A, with advertising services and major media consolidations leading activity. The Paramount-Skydance deal, in particular, has the potential to reshape the entertainment landscape, while consolidation in the advertising sector continues to accelerate. In the wake of the US presidential election, the media sector's influence on public discourse and consumer engagement will be more significant than ever, setting the stage for another dynamic year in 2025.
